

LABORonline

LaborOnline is LAWCHA and Labor's official blog. It features commentary on a host of issues, contemporary and historical, as well as instant dialogue and debate among readers and authors about the contents of the journal.

BY

LAWCHA

THE LABOR AND WORKING-CLASS HISTORY ASSOCIATION

Hundreds of Posts

Covering current events, teaching materials, academic debates, commemorating and remembering the past, and much more!

Thousands of Readers

Many of our articles reach tens of thousands of readers from all over the world.

Discuss Current Events

Whether it be player's associations in the NFL, the resurgence of populism in the U.S., or the global struggle to raise the minimum wage, there's room to discuss it at LaborOnline.

Journal Content

Thanks to the Duke University Press, we are able to periodically offer access to relevant journal content in many articles.

Contributors

LaborOnline features a diverse cast of writers, including independent scholars, graduate students, emeritus faculty, and labor activists.

Your Photo Here?

We accept all contributions from contributors far and wide, from long-form pieces to short musings on specific topics. Why write for us?

- Reach a large, yet diverse audience
- Join a cast of excellent writers and readers who share your interests
- Spark intense, engaged discussion on recent topics
- Inform our public readers of the historical dimensions of current events

Interested?

Email LAWCHA@Duke.edu to get started!

CHECK IT OUT AT

LAWCHA.org/LaborOnline